

FDA expert advisors wonder: Why did the FDA approve a second booster before consulting us?

Allahpundit Apr 07, 2022 10:41 PM ET

AP Photo/Damian Dovarganes

It's pretty sketchy.

Especially for an agency that had bent over backward in the past to assure the public that everything was being done above board with the vaccines. When scientists detected a few cases of blood clotting in recipients of the Johnson & Johnson vaccine last year, that product was briefly yanked from the market while experts investigated. The FDA did so in order to show good faith and give Americans confidence that the feds wouldn't try to cover up an unexpected side effect of a vaccine if one was detected.

